

Joargy Perez

Gilman Program Alumni Ambassador
Singapore, 2019

“Immersing myself in a new environment helped me develop crucial skills like communication and adaptability. This personal growth boosted my confidence and prepared me to navigate new challenges and seize impactful opportunities in my career.”

- Co-lead for Citizen Diplomacy Action Fund (CDAF) project “River Resilience: Youth at the Heart of Dominican Sustainability” in the Dominican Republic
- Bachelor of Science in business administration and management with concentrations in finance and economics from Babson College

Joargy’s experience abroad at Singapore Management University provided her with valuable insights into diverse cultures and helped her develop a global mindset. In 2022, she participated in the Gilman Climate Leaders Overseas Seminar in Denmark, which was pivotal in her career shift to the renewable energy sector.

Joargy works as a financial planning and analysis associate at Swift Current Energy, an independent producer of utility-scale solar and wind projects across the United States. She is dedicated to merging her financial expertise with sustainability, working toward reaching global environmental goals.

She credits her Gilman experience for her professional growth and career transitions. Passionate about helping future Gilman scholars, she is dedicated to guiding them in communicating the value of their international experiences to employers. As a Gilman Alumni Ambassador, she is excited to share her journey and inspire others to use their abroad experiences to achieve success and make meaningful contributions in their fields.
